Infection Control (Revisited): Avoid Being the Next Dentist Poster Child!

Having good intentions, being good people or running a good, honest dental practice will earn you no favor if OSHA or the Dental Board happen to walk into your office. Infection Control inspections are markedly increasing by the Dental Board (we know because we receive calls from dentists following an inspection). It is your knowledge and practical application of infection control techniques that can make or break your practice during such a surprise inspection. Best case scenario you deal with a small inconvenience of your time and your practice passes an inspection.

At worst, you lose your license and end up a spectacular story like the oral surgeon in Tulsa, or the two dentists in Rhode Island, the woman dentist in Pennsylvania, or the paperclip dentist in Colorado. Each of these dentists has suffered SERIOUS reputational harm.

What if OSHA or the Dental Board show up at your practice tomorrow during the busiest part of your day? Picture your office at its worst. That is likely the condition your office will likely be if you ever endure an inspection because of Murphy's law - what can go wrong will (and at the worst possible time). Murphy is alive and well in the dental profession! Join us as we discuss how to prevent infection control complaints, how to deal with an inspection and what NOT to do if you are faced with an infection control allegation.

NOTE: If you are looking for a boring presentation where we look through each of the CDC's recommendations for infection control THIS IS NOT THE COURSE FOR YOU!

The Tooth cop (A.K.A. Duane Tinker) uses his experience as a former dental cop to teach dentists and their staff how to prevent the very issues he once investigated them for. He is an outsource compliance officer for dentists and small dental groups throughout the country. Mr. Tinker's unique background and his PASSION to profoundly impact the dental community make him a powerful ally for dentists. To connect and learn how to protect your practice go to www.DentalCompliance.com.
